Andy Byron, Chief Executive Officer of data orchestration company Astronomer, is facing public scrutiny after a viral video allegedly captured a romantic moment between him and Kristin Cabot, the company's Chief People Officer, during a Coldplay concert in Boston.

The video, which began circulating widely on social media last Thursday, appears to show Byron and Cabot embracing in the crowd during a segment of the concert when Coldplay frontman Chris Martin was interacting with audience members. The moment gained attention after the pair appeared startled and attempted to hide their faces upon realizing they were on the venue's large screen.

According to the concert footage, when Martin addressed the crowd and noticed the couple, he remarked, "Either they're having an affair or they're just very shy," as Byron crouched behind a barrier and Cabot covered her face with her hands. The clip quickly gained traction online, with viewers speculating about the nature of their relationship.

What fueled further controversy is the fact that Byron is married to Megan Kerrigan Byron, raising questions about the potential workplace and personal implications of the incident.

Astronomer has not issued a formal statement as of Thursday evening, and there has been no public comment from either Byron or Cabot regarding the matter. The company's internal policies on executive conduct or workplace relationships have not been publicly disclosed. The moment has prompted widespread conversation on social media, not just about the alleged affair but also about professional ethics and transparency within executive leadership. Despite the viral nature of the footage, no official confirmation has been made regarding the relationship between Byron and Cabot beyond what is visible in the video.
