Poland's newly inaugurated President Karol Nawrocki is set to meet with U.S. President Donald Trump in Washington on 3 September 2025. This meeting underscores the ongoing commitment to strengthen Polish-American relations, a priority highlighted by Nawrocki since taking office.

Karol Nawrocki was sworn in as Poland's president earlier this week, following a campaign supported by the conservative Law and Justice party, Poland's main nationalist opposition group. Before the Polish presidential election in May, Nawrocki met with President Trump in the Oval Office, where he secured Trump's endorsement for his candidacy.

The invitation for the Washington visit came directly from President Trump in an official congratulatory letter sent on Nawrocki's inauguration day, according to Pawel Szefernaker, head of Nawrocki's cabinet. Szefernaker announced the invitation on the social media platform X, confirming that the meeting will be an official working session.

Nawrocki has frequently stressed the importance of a robust partnership between Poland and the United States. The upcoming meeting is expected to focus on mutual security interests, economic cooperation, and regional stability, reflecting the strategic alliance that has deepened over recent years.

Poland remains a key NATO member and a critical partner in Central and Eastern Europe, often collaborating closely with the United States on defence and diplomatic initiatives. The relationship between Warsaw and Washington has grown stronger under both leaders, rooted in shared values and geopolitical concerns.

The September meeting comes amid ongoing challenges in the region and the broader transatlantic partnership, signalling a continuation of close dialogue between the two countries. Both presidents are expected to reaffirm their commitment to security cooperation, economic ties, and broader strategic goals.

This official visit marks an important step in the early months of Nawrocki's presidency and reflects the priority he places on maintaining and enhancing Poland's relationship with the United States. The meeting with President Trump is anticipated to set the tone for future collaboration between the two nations.
