Jurassic Stage Spectacle Returns to Barry in 2025

July 15, 2025

— Categories: General News

Families in Barry can look forward to a roaring good time next summer as Dinosaur Adventure Live makes a much-anticipated return to the town as part of its nationwide tour. The event, known for its thrilling prehistoric performances, will once again take to the stage at the Memo Arts Centre this July 25, 2025.

Organised by RED Entertainment, Dinosaur Adventure Live is embarking on its third United Kingdom tour, promising bigger and bolder spectacles than ever before. The live-action show is described as an immersive journey that combines storytelling, humour, and educational elements suitable for audiences of all ages. Children, in particular, are encouraged to participate in the interactive experience.

The upcoming production features a brand-new storyline set on the fictional Dinosaur Island, where a rogue satellite wreaks havoc on the local weather system, creating what organisers have dubbed a “Jurassic Storm”. The narrative challenge tasks the audience with uncovering a hidden code to reboot the system and ultimately rescue the stranded dinosaurs.

Scripted by Mike Newman, this year’s plot aims to raise the stakes while maintaining a light-hearted tone suitable for a family audience. The setting, an overgrown and abandoned laboratory, is designed to bring the prehistoric world to life in a thrilling and accessible way. Life-sized dinosaur puppets, dramatic lighting, and vivid backdrops are just a few of the techniques used to engage and amaze.

Family Favourite

The show has become a staple for families seeking exciting and educational outings during the school holidays. Since its first tour, Dinosaur Adventure Live has built a loyal following, with many children returning each year to see what new creatures and plot twists have been added.

A spokesperson for RED Entertainment said: “Dinosaur Adventure Live is back with its third chapter, touring across the U.K. in 2025. This family favourite show has brand new dinosaur additions and an exciting new adventure, making it the perfect family day out. Captivating both the young and young at heart, step back in time to a world of living, breathing, life-like dinosaurs in this brand-new ROAR-some adventure.”

The show’s blend of hands-on involvement, fast-paced action, and age-appropriate comedy continues to win over crowds. It provides children with a fun introduction to natural history while also keeping the grown-ups entertained.

As many regional theatres face financial challenges, the popularity of high-quality touring productions like this offers a much-needed boost. Venues such as Barry’s Memo Arts Centre benefit from increased footfall and community interest, keeping local arts alive and well without relying too heavily on state support.

The production has avoided political themes, focusing instead on timeless values such as curiosity, cooperation, and bravery. It reminds us of the power of live storytelling and imagination in connecting families through shared experience.

Tickets for the Barry show are expected to be in high demand, and those hoping to join the prehistoric adventure are advised to book early. With stops planned across the United Kingdom throughout the year, Dinosaur Adventure Live is set to make 2025 its biggest and boldest chapter yet.
