Police are investigating a deadly shooting that occurred just after midnight on Sunday in the southwest area of the city.

Authorities responded at approximately 12:30 am to the 200 block of 12th Street Southwest after receiving reports of gunfire. When officers arrived at the scene, they found a man suffering from a gunshot wound. Emergency responders confirmed the man had died on-site. Officials have not yet released his identity.

As of now, no arrests have been made in connection with the incident. The Roanoke Police Department has asked that anyone with information related to the shooting contact them at 540-344-8500.

This deadly encounter marks the third reported shooting in Roanoke within a 12-hour timeframe, highlighting a concerning spike in violent crime over the weekend. The string of incidents began Saturday afternoon when two teenage boys were shot at a residence on Crescent Street shortly after 3 pm. Later that evening, around 11 pm, officers responded to a separate shooting on Hunt Avenue, where a man was also shot. Details regarding the conditions of the other victims have not been provided.

The back-to-back violence in such a short span has placed increased pressure on local law enforcement to get answers and maintain public safety. No links between the three incidents have been officially confirmed at this stage, and investigations into each case remain ongoing.

While police have not released further information about potential suspects or motives, they are urging residents to remain vigilant and to report any suspicious activity that could assist in their efforts.

As the investigations continue, the community awaits updates from law enforcement regarding the identities of those involved and whether the cases may be connected.

Roanoke Police are continuing to process evidence and follow leads in these recent shootings. Anyone who may have witnessed any of the incidents or who may have home surveillance footage in the vicinity is encouraged to come forward.

Further updates are expected as more details become available.
