A man was taken to the hospital with injuries after an early morning stabbing at a park in Lansing, Michigan. The incident took place around 12:38 a.m. on Monday at St. Joseph Park, according to the Lansing Police Department.

Authorities confirmed that the man sustained non-life-threatening injuries in the attack and was transported to a nearby hospital for treatment. As of this time, no arrests have been made, and the investigation remains ongoing.

The Lansing Police Department, which continues to handle the case, has not released any information regarding a suspect or what may have led to the stabbing. Investigators have not said whether the victim and the attacker knew each other.

The incident is being treated as an isolated case, but officials are urging anyone who may have witnessed the event or has relevant information to come forward.

Police have not yet identified the victim publicly, and no further details about his condition have been made available beyond the confirmation that his injuries are not considered life-threatening.

As of Monday afternoon, officers continue to review the scene's evidence and speak with potential witnesses.

The investigation at St. Joseph Park adds to a growing number of violent incidents being reported in the region in recent months. While Lansing continues to deal with its share of public safety concerns, local law enforcement says efforts remain focused on quickly responding to and solving violent crimes in the community.

The case remains open, and authorities are expected to release more details as the investigation progresses. In the meantime, police are asking residents who frequent the park during late-night or early-morning hours to remain alert and report anything suspicious.

Anyone with information that could help with this case is encouraged to contact the Lansing Police Department at 517-483-4600.
