Formula One fans gear up as the 2025 British Grand Prix kicks off at Silverstone. Here's what you need to know about today's race time, schedule, and how to watch the action. The roar of engines, the cheers of a packed crowd, and the rich history of Silverstone all come together today as the 2025 British Grand Prix takes centre stage in the Formula One World Championship calendar. Set at the legendary Silverstone Circuit, this race remains one of the most anticipated events of the season, both for its legacy and the thrilling on-track action it promises.

The main race kicks off today, Sunday, July 6, at 3:00 p.m. British Summer Time (BST). It's the twelfth round of the 2025 Formula One season, marking the official halfway point in this year's championship. Fans can expect a full day of racing excitement, starting from the early morning hours with support races and pre-race features. These include the driver parade and final warm-ups before the lights go out and the action begins.

Silverstone has long been known as the "Home of British Motorsport," and for good reason. The circuit first hosted a Formula One World Championship race in 1950 and has been a regular fixture ever since. With its mix of high-speed corners, technical sections, and passionate home fans, Silverstone often brings out the best in drivers and teams. British favourites such as Lewis Hamilton and rising stars like Lando Norris are always crowd favourites at this venue, and they'll be hoping to deliver memorable performances on home soil.

This year's race is especially important as championship battles heat up. Every point now becomes more crucial for drivers and constructors aiming for the title. Whether it's a seasoned champion defending their legacy or a young contender trying to make a mark, the British Grand Prix offers a key turning point in the season.

Television and streaming coverage of the event will be available across multiple platforms, depending on your location. In the United Kingdom, fans can follow the full race day through broadcasters like Sky Sports and Channel 4. International audiences can access coverage via official Formula One broadcast partners or through the Formula 1 TV streaming service.

With a rich history, strong local support, and intense competition, the British Grand Prix at Silverstone continues to be a cornerstone of Formula One. As engines fire up and the lights go out, fans around the world will be watching to see who takes the top spot on one of racing's most iconic stages.
