Brisbane, Australia, Multiple crime scenes have been established across northern Brisbane after a woman was found dead inside her residence, authorities confirmed. Police said they were called to the property in the early hours following reports of concern for the woman's welfare.

According to Queensland Police, the deceased has been identified as a local mother in her 30s. Officers are treating the case as suspicious, and an investigation is ongoing. Detectives from the Brisbane North Police District have cordoned off several locations as part of their inquiries.

"Multiple scenes are currently under examination as we piece together the circumstances surrounding this tragic event," a police spokesperson said. "We urge the public to remain vigilant and to provide any information that may assist our investigation."

Witnesses in the area reported increased police activity, including forensic teams working across multiple addresses in the suburb. Police have not released details regarding potential suspects or motives, citing the early stage of the investigation.

Residents expressed shock and concern following news of the death. "It's upsetting to know something like this has happened in our neighborhood," one resident said. "We hope the authorities can find answers quickly."

Authorities emphasized that anyone with relevant information should contact Queensland Police or Crime Stoppers. All tips are treated confidentially and can aid ongoing efforts to ensure justice is served.

Brisbane police have also indicated that further updates will be released as investigations progress. Media outlets have been asked to avoid speculating on details that have not been confirmed by authorities.

The incident underscores the importance of community vigilance and cooperation with law enforcement. While details remain limited, police are committed to a thorough investigation to determine the full circumstances surrounding the woman's death.

Residents are advised to stay aware of their surroundings and report any unusual activity in their communities. The Queensland Police continue to investigate multiple related locations as part of their ongoing inquiry.

This story remains developing, and authorities are urging the public not to interfere with the ongoing investigation. Updates will follow once verified information is available.
