A man was rushed to the hospital with life-threatening injuries following a shooting that took place early Sunday morning in Lexington, Kentucky. The incident occurred in the 3600 block of Tates Creek Road and remains under investigation by local authorities.

According to police, the call came in around 2:00 am, reporting that someone had been struck by gunfire. Officers responded promptly to the scene, where they discovered a victim suffering from critical injuries caused by the shooting. Emergency crews transported the man to a nearby hospital for urgent medical care.

The condition of the victim has not been publicly updated, but officials have confirmed that the injuries were considered life-threatening at the time of the response. Law enforcement has not yet released the identity of the individual.

Police have not confirmed what led to the shooting or whether there are any suspects in custody. The details surrounding the motive and possible involvement of others are still unclear, and authorities have not shared whether the victim was targeted or if the act was random.

The scene was secured by police for several hours overnight as investigators worked to gather evidence and speak with anyone who may have seen or heard something. No further information has been released regarding the weapon used or how many shots were fired.

Tates Creek Road, located in a busy part of the city, is known for its residential and commercial properties. The 3600 block, where the shooting occurred, remained under police presence through much of the early morning as officers processed the scene.

As of now, no official statement has been issued by the hospital treating the victim. It is also not yet known whether the victim was alone at the time of the shooting or if any surveillance footage from nearby businesses might help identify those responsible.

The investigation remains active, and police have stated they will release additional details as they become available. Authorities are urging community members to stay alert and report any suspicious activity in the area.

Anyone with information about the incident is encouraged to contact the Lexington Police Department or submit tips anonymously through local crime reporting channels.

This story will be updated as more details are confirmed by officials.
