XRP is gaining strong momentum in 2025 as whale accumulation and upcoming exchange-traded funds (ETFs) drive bullish sentiment. With prices hovering around $3.41—up 30% this week—investors are eyeing a potential move to $6 before year-end.

Ripple’s native token recently broke past a key resistance level near $2.80, setting the stage for further gains. On-chain data shows over 2,700 wallets now hold more than 1 million XRP, accounting for nearly half of the circulating supply. This growing concentration reflects heightened interest from large-scale holders.

At the same time, institutional interest is rising. A futures-based XRP ETF from ProShares is set to launch on July 18. Several major firms—including Grayscale, Bitwise, Franklin Templeton, and 21Shares—have filed applications for spot XRP ETFs. Market analysts estimate an 88% chance of approval before the end of 2025.

Technically, XRP's recent breakout from a long-standing symmetrical triangle pattern is seen as a strong bullish signal. Analysts are watching key resistance at $3.20–$3.40. A confirmed close above this range could trigger a run toward higher levels.

Fibonacci extensions point to the following potential price targets:

- $6 (1.272 extension)
- $9 (1.414 extension)
- $16 (1.618 extension)

A recent $70 million whale transfer to an exchange and declining short positions suggest positive market expectations. Analysts believe that if XRP holds above $3 with strong volume, a move toward $6 is likely in the coming months.

Still, traders are watching support closely between $2.60 and $2.85, which may be retested if the current rally pauses.

XRP's outlook for 2025 appears increasingly bullish, driven by:

- Institutional ETF activity
- Whale accumulation
- Positive technical signals

While volatility is expected, XRP's setup could position the asset for significant growth if market momentum continues.
