England's Lionesses are poised for a thrilling Women's Euro 2025 quarter-final against Sweden, as they aim to edge closer to retaining their coveted title. Sarina Wiegman's squad, galvanised after a rocky start, face a formidable Swedish side at Zurich's Letzigrund stadium tonight, with kick-off at 8 pm U.K.time.

The Lionesses stumbled in their opening match, falling to France, which sparked fears of an early exit. However, they've since roared back with commanding victories, dismantling the Netherlands 4-0 and overpowering Wales 6-1. These performances have restored confidence in the squad's ability to defend their crown.

Sweden, however, will be no pushovers. The Scandinavian side has been relentless, winning all their group-stage matches, including a stunning 4-1 demolition of Germany. Their clinical finishing and disciplined defence make them a significant threat.

Fans can catch every moment of this high-stakes encounter through multiple channels. talkSPORT will provide live coverage, hosted by Adrian Durham, with commentary from Joe Shennan and former England star Tash Dowie. Regular updates will also be available on talkSPORT.com. Listeners can tune in via the talkSPORT app, DAB digital radio, smart speakers, or on 1089/1053 AM. England's confirmed line-up sees Wiegman stick with her tried-and-tested formation, blending experience with youthful flair. Key players like Beth Mead and Lauren Hemp, who shone against Wales, are expected to lead the attack. Sweden, meanwhile, boasts a balanced squad, with their recent thrashing of Germany highlighting their depth and firepower.

In a recent interview with talkSPORT, Tash Dowie praised England's resilience: "The Lionesses have shown real character after that France loss. They're clicking now, but Sweden's form makes this a proper test."

With both teams in scintillating form, this quarter-final promises to be a fiercely contested battle. England will need to be at their sharpest to overcome a Swedish side brimming with confidence.
