Shares of Trident Ltd, the Indian textile manufacturer, jumped over 6% on Monday as investors cheered a combination of positive regulatory updates and a major geopolitical shift in the textile trade.

The stock climbed 6.3% intraday to ₹33.10 on the Bombay Stock Exchange (BSE), reflecting optimism that new US tariffs on Bangladeshi textiles could open up lucrative opportunities for Indian exporters. The US administration, under President Donald Trump, recently announced a steep 35% tariff on textile imports from Bangladesh. By comparison, Indian textile exports to the United States currently face an average duty of around 10%, although some products attract tariffs as high as 26%.

Analysts believe this policy change could reconfigure global supply chains, giving Indian manufacturers like Trident a competitive edge. With Bangladeshi goods now significantly more expensive for American buyers, Indian exporters may gain pricing power and see fresh demand if trade negotiations evolve in their favor.

While the tariff news dominated headlines, Trident also strengthened its credibility on the compliance front. On July 7, the company filed a regulatory certificate under Regulation 74(5) of the Securities and Exchange Board of India (Depositories and Participants) Regulations, 2018. The document, backed by KFin Technologies Ltd, confirmed that Trident had properly shared all dematerialization and rematerialization data for the quarter that ended June 30, 2025, with both the BSE and National Stock Exchange (NSE).

This commitment to transparent reporting and governance has reassured investors and underscored Trident's focus on maintaining robust corporate practices. The company also encouraged shareholders to verify any signatory authorizations through its official website or approved communication channels.

From a technical perspective, Trident appears to be on solid footing. The Relative Strength Index (RSI), a popular momentum indicator, is at 54.1. This reading suggests the stock is neither overbought nor oversold, allowing room for further gains if buying interest continues. Additionally, Trident is trading above all its key simple moving averages, ranging from the short-term 5-day average to the long-term 200-day trend. Such an alignment across timeframes is often seen as a strong bullish signal, reflecting a well-supported uptrend.

With global trade winds shifting and regulatory clarity in place, Trident's outlook has brightened at least in the eyes of the market.
