RAWALPINDI – A new housing project, Abdullah City Islamabad, is taking shape on Chakri Road, offering a mix of residential, commercial, and farmhouse plots. The development is spearheaded by Al-Aziz Builders & Developers and is located just 10 minutes from Chakri Interchange, making it easily accessible from Islamabad and Rawalpindi.

Though named after the capital, Abdullah City falls within the Rawalpindi district. Its branding leverages the proximity to Islamabad while benefiting from lower land costs and expanding infrastructure in the Chakri area.

The project is currently in its early development phase, with construction activities already underway. One of the key infrastructure projects includes the installation of a main gas pipeline, which will ensure consistent utility services for future residents.

Abdullah City promises high living standards with market-competitive pricing, attracting both homebuyers and investors. Plots are available on flexible installment plans, making them accessible to a broader demographic. According to early plans, the society will feature essential urban amenities, including paved roads, street lighting, parks, security systems, and community centers.

Developers have positioned the project as a budget-friendly alternative to pricier sectors of Islamabad, aiming to offer value without compromising on lifestyle or connectivity. Given the continuing demand for housing near major urban centers, particularly Islamabad, the project has drawn interest from real estate investors across Pakistan and abroad.

The site's location along Chakri Road is also strategic, as this corridor is seeing increased government and private-sector development. Improved road networks, better access to the motorway, and proximity to the proposed Ring Road Rawalpindi make this region a focal point for future urban expansion.

With its range of plot sizes, flexible payment plans, and proximity to Islamabad, Abdullah City Islamabad is positioned as a promising addition to the Rawalpindi-Islamabad housing market. As construction progresses, further updates on possession timelines and infrastructure completion are expected from the developers.
