New South Wales Police Force is urging the public to help locate a man reported missing from Pemulwuy, with concerns growing for his welfare.

The New South Wales Police Force is appealing to the public for assistance in locating a man who has been reported missing from the western Sydney suburb of Pemulwuy. Concerns for the man's welfare have grown since he was last seen, prompting an active search and a call for community support.

According to police, the man was reported missing after he failed to make contact with family and friends, which is considered out of character. Officers from the Cumberland Police Area Command have taken charge of the investigation and are urging anyone who may have seen the man or has relevant information to come forward as soon as possible.

Police have not disclosed the man's identity at this stage, likely to protect his privacy and that of his family. However, they are working closely with loved ones and are continuing to follow all available leads.

The disappearance has sparked concern within the local community, and authorities are encouraging residents to remain alert and report anything that may assist in locating the man. Investigators are particularly interested in any dashcam footage or sightings from the Pemulwuy area around the time the man was last seen.

"Every piece of information counts," a police spokesperson said. "Even the smallest detail can help us piece together the man's movements and assist in safely returning him to his family."

Search efforts have included door knocks, checks of local parks and reserves, and reviews of CCTV footage from surrounding areas. Police are also working with other emergency services to widen the scope of the search if necessary.

Family and friends of the missing man are said to be deeply distressed and are hopeful that public cooperation will help bring him home safely. Community members are being reminded that if they see anyone matching the man's description or notice anything unusual, they should not hesitate to contact Crime Stoppers or the nearest police station.

Anyone with information is urged to contact Crime Stoppers on 1800 333 000 or submit a confidential report via their website. Callers can choose to remain anonymous.

The New South Wales Police Force continues to prioritise the case and has reassured the public that they are doing everything possible to find the missing man. As the search continues, community support remains crucial.

This incident highlights the importance of public awareness and cooperation during missing person investigations. Authorities remain hopeful that with ongoing help from the community, the man will soon be found safe and well.
