

OpenVoiceNews Australia

Transparent. Unbiased. Yours.

Wall Street Pepe ($WEPE) Prepares for Solana Expansion as Momentum Builds

July 23, 2025

– Categories: Crypto

Wall Street Pepe ($WEPE), a rising meme coin in the crypto world, is capturing serious market attention as it gears up to launch on the Solana blockchain. The token's price has surged 145% over the past month, thanks to strong trading volume, an engaged community, and anticipation of a major breakout above key resistance levels.

Currently priced at $0.0001123, WEPE has tested the $0.0001249 resistance level multiple times, falling short but showing the strength to push through soon. Analysts note that the Relative Strength Index (RSI), a popular momentum indicator, stands at 65. That reading suggests there's still room to climb before the asset becomes overbought. With altcoin season in full swing and small-cap coins leading market gains, WEPE's setup looks especially bullish.

According to data from DEXTools, a popular crypto analytics platform, WEPE has attracted more than 79,000 holders, an impressive feat for a token with a modest market cap of just $22 million. Daily trading volume topped $1 million earlier this week and continues to rise, driven in part by fresh developments including its roadmap release, upcoming NFT (non-fungible token) drops, and news of its expansion to Solana (SOL), one of the most active networks for meme coins and decentralized finance.

Technical analysts suggest that once WEPE decisively breaks past $0.0001249, the former resistance could turn into a support level. The next target for bullish traders is $0.0001400. Given WEPE's current trajectory and community-driven push, this milestone may not be far off.

But this surge isn't just about technicals. Behind WEPE's rise is its influential "Alpha Chat" group, an invite-only Telegram and Discord community where active traders share early investment calls. Some of these calls, like PENGU, have generated eye-watering returns of 700% or more. Others, such as POPCAT, MOODENG, and PNUT, have each netted users' gains in the 50% range. According to chat participants, one trader alone reported an unrealized profit of over $120,000 from PENGU, an amount likely to have grown substantially since.

WEPE's momentum is also fueled by its cultural appeal. The project blends finance and internet humor by positioning itself as a humorous yet pointed nod to Wall Street excess, featuring a cartoon frog dressed like a certain infamous stockbroker. It resonates with retail traders, especially younger ones, who are tired of being locked out of wealth by entrenched financial systems and elitist institutions. In WEPE's world, Main Street fights back, with memes and markets.

WEPE's social media footprint is growing, too. Its official account on X (formerly Twitter) boasts over 55,000 followers, and user-generated content continues to flood the space. Many of these memes reinforce the community's ethos of "choosing rich" and rejecting the "poor man's mindset", an idea that has taken hold across crypto circles and speaks to a broader sentiment of economic discontent, particularly under the current leadership's economic policies.

While no official word has come from the team, rumors are swirling about a possible listing on Gate.io, a global crypto exchange. If confirmed, that listing would further boost WEPE's accessibility and legitimacy. Meanwhile, the team is actively collaborating with other Web3 communities and preparing for their NFT launch, which could drive more eyes and wallets toward the token.

For now, Wall Street Pepe is proving that you don't need to be part of the elite class to play and win in financial markets. With solid community backing, market momentum, and a savvy approach to decentralized finance, WEPE is positioning itself as a serious contender in the meme coin space and a rare example of Main Street getting one up on Wall Street.